

Ancient dice

COURTESY: ROBERT MADDEN

■ More than 12,000 years ago, Native American hunter-gatherers were already making and using dice — thousands of years before similar tools appeared elsewhere. These bone “binary lots” acted as primitive coins, producing random outcomes for games of chance. A new study by Colorado State University, US, shows these weren’t accidental objects but carefully designed tools used across many regions and cultures.