

Crying wolf

■ Scientists based at Stockholm University in Sweden discovered ancient wolves on a tiny Baltic island where they could only have been brought by humans, suggesting an unexpectedly close relationship between people and wolves thousands of years ago. Evidence indicates the wolves were fed, possibly cared for and may even have been managed or selectively bred long before modern ideas of domestication.

AGENCIES

ISTOCK.COM/AB PHOTOGRAPHY