

Bee flight

■ Researchers at the University of Freiburg in Germany tracked honey bees using a drone-based system and found that each bee follows its own highly consistent flight path. Some repeated their routes so precisely that they deviated only centimetres from the path they had flown before. Landmarks like trees helped keep them on track, while uniform areas such as cornfields led to more variation.

AGENCIES